

GRIM TRAGEDY MARS WEDDING PARTY

Attendant at Wedding Of Frankfort Couple Killed In Auto Crash

Tragedy climaxed the close of wedding festivities at Frankfort last Saturday night, when Elmer Bausch, 26 years old, the best man at the wedding of Max Haass and Miss Elizabeth Vito both of Frankfort and his friend Wm. Coleman, 25, figured in a fatal automobile crash about midnight, while going at a high rate of speed on the concrete highway near the four corners north of Frankfort.

Coleman who was driving, apparently lost control of the car which crashed into a telephone pole snapping it off like a tooth pick and then hitting a large tree, partly up-rooting it.

Coleman was fatally injured and died within a few moments after the crash, Bausch suffered only minor cuts and bruises. Both men resided at 305 West Scott street in Chicago.

Dr. M. J. Buckley of Frankfort was summoned and rendered first aid.

Sabin Home In Marley Scene of Pretty Wedding

A lovely home wedding took place on Sunday afternoon Nov. 20 when Eleanor Florence Sabin, daughter of Mr. Harry Sabin of Marley became the bride of Francis R. Nelson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis F. Nelson, also of Marley. The marriage which took place in the Sabin home, was performed in the presence of a few close friends and relatives.

The bridal party took their places before a bower of palms, ferns and chrysanthemums. Homer Sabin, brother of the bride, served as best man. Miss Gladys Nelson sister of the groom was the bride's attendant.

As Lohengrins wedding march was played by Mrs. Edw. Sproat, the bride descended the stairway preceded by the bridesmaid. At the foot of the stairway she was met by her father and together they proceeded to the altar where they were met by the groom and the rest of the bridal party. The single ring ceremony was performed by Rev. Paul Sanders of the Community Center Foundation.

The bride wore a gown of white cut velvet fashioned in princess style. Her cap, fashioned to a halo, was also of cut velvet. To it was attached the finger tip tulle veil. She carried a bridal bouquet of white mums and pom poms. For something old she carried the wedding handkerchief which had belonged to her mother. Work Progressing On Skating Rink

Work is progressing at high speed on the new Mokena skating rink. The rink has an overall area of 16,230 sq. feet or room for eighteen houses, 25 x 35 feet long which should be ample room for skaters.

It was learned from authentic sources, that it will be completed within a week. The ice fans have ordered cold weather for Christmas school children have set record and example for PWA to follow as picks shovels, and dirt fly.

Dirt is picked and shoveled into wheel barrows, hauled 150 feet, dumped in a minute and 7 seconds, by school boys. Wheelbarrows hold from 100 to 150 lbs.

Mr. Dunn acted as straw boss officiating and inspiring the boys by clean PWA jokes and contests promoting keen competition among the ambitious workers.

This project is sponsored by the Civic Association to promote clean amusement for children as well as adults. President R. A. Bechstein of the Association as well as Alvin Sorenson and Jim Eggerton, members were present despite the chilling wind. Work and workers progressed merrily with an occasional outburst of laughter and singing.

The petition for the project has gone through with an overwhelming majority. The Rock Island Railroad demanded this petition to assure itself that the opposition voiced was not the true sentiment of the town.

Sunday members practically finished the rink.

The rink will be divided into two parts. The larger part will be reserved for adults and larger children, while the smaller children will have a rink of their own.

If the work and services had not been donated the cost would be approximately $100.

Either the fire or police department will flood it. It will be in charge of active members of the Association, as will building of fires and ice regulation.

I can never describe the magic that hung in her steady gaze. Before it, the rabble melted, the mob dispersed, and my plight became an adventure, which I was sharing with her—a very insignificant business, because that we were together was so much more important than anything else.

I tried my best to tell her that all was well. And I think that she understood, for the rarest smile stole into her lovely eyes . . . And then I came back to earth, like a giant refreshed.

She was gagged and bound, as I was. But her ankles were tied together, as well as her delicate wrists. Cord had been used—to do this sacrilege. She was clad in a blue cloth dress that I did not know—no doubt to bear out the suggestion of sudden flight. Her beautiful hair was tumbled, but that was all.

Virgil was speaking again. "You will have observed, Mr. Exon, perhaps with hope, that while we have bound my cousin's, we have not bound your feet. I will tell you why. Because she is light to carry, but you are not. And so you will walk—to the car. Now, lest you should abuse this freedom, I'm going to put you on a lead." He held up his cord. "One end—this end will be fastened about your waist: and the other about my cousin's most excellent neck. You see? I have made a slip-knot . . . the knot that they hang people with. So that any irregular movement which you may see fit to make will put to inconvenience your, er, heart's desire. In fact, if I were you, I should emulate Mary's lamb. Not that it matters—if you like to choke her yourself. But I've really made other arrangements—a shade less exacting, I think. But I'll leave it to you to judge."

With that, he stepped across and set the loop he had made about Elizabeth's neck. Before my horrified eyes, he drew this tight—not tight enough to choke her, but so tight that the loop could not lie, as a necklace does, but stayed where he had put it against her throat. Then he and Elgar, between them, got her on Elgar's back.

Somehow I got to my knees and so to my feet, and without a word he fastened the end of the cord about my waist.

I saw Elsa standing above, with a dressing-case in her hand . . . Then Elgar began to go down, and I turned in behind him, weak-kneed for fear of stumbling and coming down and being unable to rise because my hands were tied.

Not that it mattered, perhaps. But I—I did not want to choke my darling myself.

As we went down to the terrace, I reflected on the truth of what Virgil had said—The way to win this world is to go all lengths. The man was right. It was manifestly simpler and swifter: direct action always is. But it was safer, too—because it was the way of a monster, and we believe in monsters no more than we do in giants.

Virgil was playing the monster: and that, as calmly as though he were but playing bridge. In other words, he was doing the incredible thing. If I had not seen and heard what I saw and heard that night, I would not have believed the truth though one rose from the dead. And so no one else would believe it—that Elizabeth Virgil and Exon had been haled out of the castle and put to death by a man who, six hours later, was taking his early tea with a cigarette.

I cannot clearly remember our leaving the staircase turret and passing into the air, for the cord was none too long and I could think of nothing but keeping it slack, but I know that the moon was not up, that Virgil was moving behind me, that Elgar turned to the right and stepped out for the entrance-drive.

Perhaps ten minutes went by—it may have been less, but I know we had passed the point from which Herrick and I had surveyed the castle at dawn, when I saw in the shadows ahead the shape of a car.

This was open and low—it proved to be Virgil's own car—"now under repair"—and Elgar discharged his burden directly over its side. It will be understood that I did not have to be told to enter myself, and an instant later I was upon the back seat, with Elizabeth Virgil beside me, so far as I could hear, drawing regular breath.

I suddenly realized that I was streaming with sweat . . .

The dressing-case was set at our feet and Virgil and Elgar got in. For a moment the self-starter whirled . . . Then all was silence again, except for the purr of an engine in excellent trim. Virgil sat back in his seat and let in his clutch.

It was as he did this, and we moved, that my fingers encountered something which did not belong to the seat. In an instant, they had it fast: and the moment I knew what it was, the hope which Virgil had murdered came back to life.

It was a small screwdriver . . . which Elgar or some mechanic had left in the back of the car . . . some eight inches long, over all . . . with a fine enough blade. For all I know, it may have been there for weeks, for, the seat being tilted up, it had lodged between the seat and the padding on the back of the car; and I should never have found it or known it was there, if my wrists had not been fastened behind my back.

Now, as I have said, my wrists were strapped together—not bound with cord. And every strap has a buckle, and every buckle a prong.

When a man or a beast is restrained by a leather strap, it is upon the prong of the buckle that such restraint must depend. Dis-there were trees on the right, there were none on the left. Whosoever we might be bound for, I judged we were nearly there, and I held myself all ready to strike the instant we stopped.

I have said that the night was dark, and since we were sunk in some valley which ran north and south, we were denied the glow which heralds the rising moon. Still, I could see some six feet—and that was more than I needed to do what had to be done.

And there, as though in reply, the car passed over some rise and then swept into surroundings of which I shall always think as the mouth of Hell.

In a flash the world was transformed.

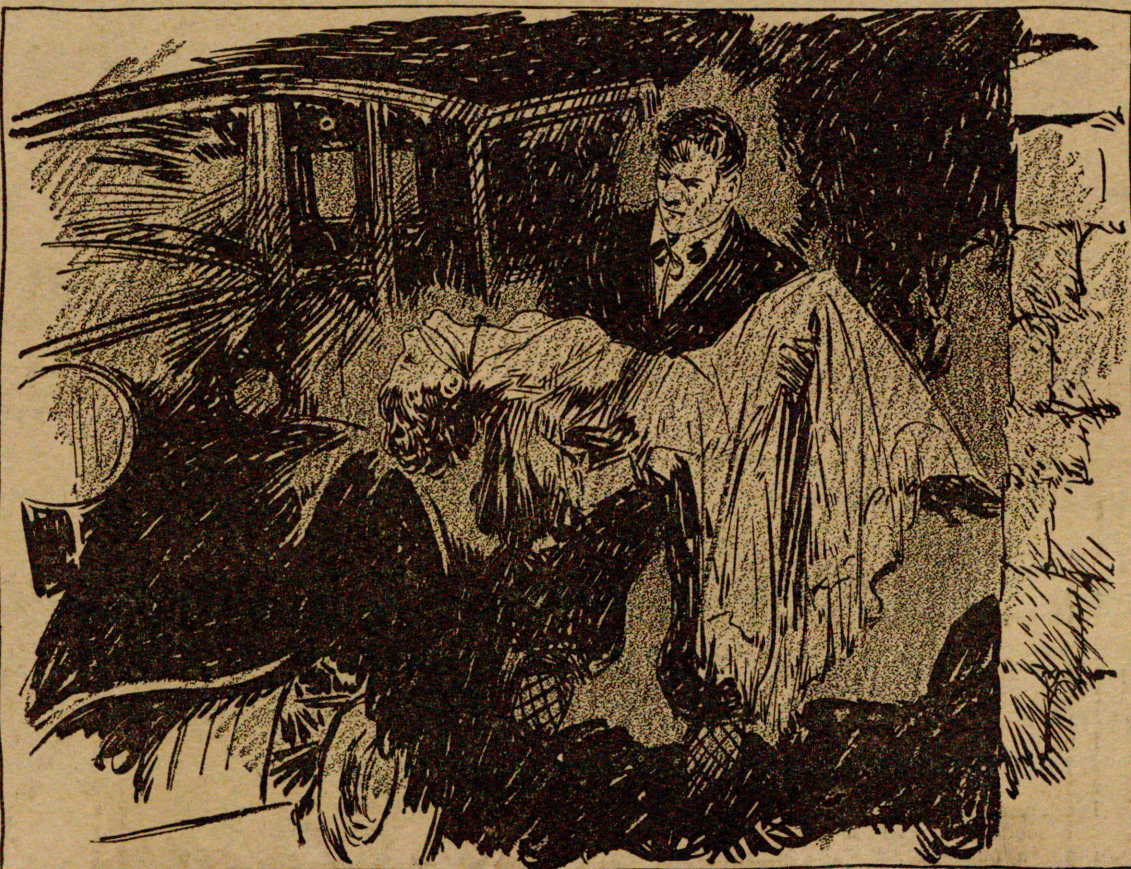

The air, which had been sweet, became the breath of corruption—be white—and it has three statues about it . . . statues of men in armor, leaning upon their swords. How's that for a sepulchre? I wish you could see it, Mr. Exon. I'm standing beside it now. Elgar, you see, has gone to borrow some stones . . . to go into the dressing-case. As anchors go, it wasn't quite heavy enough . . .

By now my door was open, and I was half out of the car, with Elizabeth in my arms.

"You see, we shall lower that first: and that will be attached to my cousin's feet. And then we shall lower her: and as she's already attached, that will bring us directly to you."

I was on the cobbles now and was stealing the way we had come. I never found it so hard to turn my engage the prong from its hole, and the stoutest strap will be loosed and all restraint be at an end.

My fingers were free. If I could contrive to thread the blade of the screw driver over the frame of the buckle and under the prong . . .

It was a difficult business. I was working blind and my fingers had not fair play, and though I soon found the buckle, I could not reach this with my fingers and so could not guide the blade, while the movement of the car was distracting the aim which I tried to make.

Again and again I was on the edge of success, and then the car would lurch and I would lose prong and buckle and sometimes my balance, too. And once the blade was in place, but, before I could drive it home, a wheel dropped into a pothole and shook it out. I could have screamed with the rage of a thwarted child . . .

And then, at last, the blade slid under the prong . . .

What happened I do not know, for I never examined the strap, but know I was trying to lever the prong from its place and the buckle was turning with it and spoiling my game, when, all of a sudden, the strap went slack on my wrists and I knew I was free.

Now my impulse was to do murder, and do it at once: break Elgar's neck and then choke Virgil to death: and but for Elizabeth's presence, I think that I should have done that—and as like as not lost my own life, when the car, which was traveling fast, crashed into a tree. But Elizabeth had to be saved. And so I did nothing at all but shake the strap from my wrists and keep my hands behind me and use my brain.

At once I saw that the first thing for me to do was to free myself from the cord which put my lady in peril whenever I moved.

With my eyes upon Virgil and Elgar, I felt for the knot at my waist. This I found and untied. Then I made a bow-knot in its stead, which I could undo in a flash whenever I pleased.

Then I saw that, for better or worse, I must not launch my attack until the car was at rest, for if, in the struggle, the car were to leave the road, Elizabeth, bound hand and foot, might fare very ill.

And then I remembered that Percy Virgil was armed.

This showed me that, come what might, I must deal with him first: else, whilst I was dealing with Elgar, he might very well put me out. And there, without any warning, our lights were "dipped" and Virgil reduced his speed . . .

Till now I had been too much engaged to observe our way, and now I could see next to nothing from where I sat: but the road was rough and winding, and though reeked of decay: the sudden chill of a morgue displaced the pleasant cool of the summer night: the steady purr of the engine changed to a snarl: and the darkness became so thick that I could not have seen my hand in front of my face. Then I knew that we were on cobbles, and, when I lifted my head, I saw the lines of three ridge-poles against the sky. We were in the great court of some mansion, long uninhabited.

Now what possessed Elgar to do it, I do not know; but, as the car came to rest and I rose to my feet, the man slewed round in his seat and dropped down a hand for Elizabeth's dressing-case. As he heaved this up, it struck me under the knees and, because I was rising and was neither up nor down, the blow made me lose my balance and sent me backwards into the seat I had left. Since this was low and tilted, I as good as fell on to my back and before I could rise again, Percy Virgil was out of the car, on the opposite side.

Not that I saw him—the darkness was far too dense. And so, at least, I knew that I had not been seen. But I knew where he was, for I heard him using my name.

"The, er, cemetery, Mr. Exon . . . it's better known as Palfrey. Nobody ever comes here, because it is said to be cursed. But, blessed or cursed, it has a magnificent well . . . Ninety feet deep, Mr. Exon. And 52 feet of water—I measured it yesterday . . . And its parapet is of white marble—at least, it used to back on a man: but Elizabeth had to be saved before anything else.

"And so, you see, Mr. Exon . . . And there I saw Elgar approaching, against the dusk prevailing without the court.

For a second I hesitated. Then I laid Elizabeth down and twitched the cord from my waist.

And then I went to meet Elgar, who could not see me . . . And, as I went, I ripped the gag from my mouth.

He must have found the case heavy, for when I was almost upon him, he laid it down for a moment, to rest his arm.

As he straightened his back, I took the man by the throat . . .

It was a curious business and seemed to belong to the stage or the cinema's screen, for whilst we two stood silent, Virgil, a little way off, was addressing the empty car. I could not hear all he said, but his tone was as careless as ever and once he laughed. But Elgar could not laugh. He never struck me. From first to last his hands were tearing at mine. They might as well have torn at the cobbles beneath our feet. So for, perhaps, a full minute . . . Then his knees sagged, and his arms fell down by his sides.

Still gripping his throat, I lowered his weight to the ground. Then I cracked his skull on the cobbles and let him go.

The sound was slight enough, but Percy Virgil heard it—and found it strange.

Society Is Formed to Protect Snakes; Authority Asserts Many Are Valuable

"If more people knew that most snakes are valuable to mankind, they would not be so eager to destroy every snake they see," says Harry C. Gardiner, who is a resident of Detroit, Michigan, and honorary president of the Michigan Herpetological society. The society has for its aims the study and protection of snakes in Michigan.

Gardiner says that the fear of snakes is deep-laid, and arises mainly from the belief that most snakes are poisonous or harmful in some way. He refutes this belief by saying that in Michigan there are 17 different kinds of snakes of which only one is poisonous—the massasauga or swamp rattler. This snake is rarely more than 30 inches long. "During my 25 years of residence in Michigan, I have never heard of a death resulting from the bite of any Michigan snake," says Gardiner.

The largest Michigan snakes are the blacksnake and the blue racer, he says. These two species are often confused. They both reproduce by laying eggs, but their feeding habits are different. Black snakes, also called pilot snakes, feed mostly upon small, warm-blooded animals, such as field mice, rats, gophers and occasionally on birds. Blue racers prey upon cold-blooded creatures, such as frogs, salamanders and small lizards, in addition to the menu of the black snake.

Commonest of all Michigan snakes is the garter snake, which, except that it may sometimes eat fish, is generally considered beneficial. This snake seems very fond of earthworms. The smallest snake in the state is a secretive little fellow called the red-bellied snake, which grows to about 10 inches.

Where Giant Tortoise Lives

The giant tortoise still roams untamed in only two places in the world—Ecuador's Galapagos islands in the Pacific and the Aldabra islands in the Indian ocean. The Aldabras, a dependency of Britain's crown colony of Seychelles, lie 500 miles southwest of the Seychelles, and are nearer Kenya.

Pretty Workaday Fashions

give them just the right lines. The high neckline, finished by a little round collar, covers up their collar bones and looks so well under young faces. This is a diagram design, therefore can be finished in a few hours. Make it of velvet, flannel, jersey, wool plaid, gingham, linen—it looks well in practically every fabric that school girls wear.

Three-Way Apron Design.

Two comfortable pinafore styles, so cut that they won't slip off at the shoulders, and a sweet little tie-around, are yours in this smart design that will help to solve many of your Christmas gift problems. Anyway you take it, or make it, this flaring, tiny-waisted apron design is a delight to make and to wear. Dimity, percale, dotted swiss, organdie and batiste, in white, dainty prints or pastels, are pretty fabrics for aprons.

AROUND the HOUSE Items of Interest to the Housewife

Toast Animals.—Cut animal shapes out of bread with animal cookie cutters. Spread with butter and toast a light golden brown under the broiler. Serve these to the children to eat with their soup.

Keeping Apples Whole.—Core apples before paring. They are less likely to break. A broad paring causes much waste because of the rounding surface of the apples.

Washing Dingy Bath Towels.—Bath towels that have become dingy should be put into boiler of cold water, soap added and a little lemon juice. Heat water to boiling point. Rinse towels in lukewarm blueing water and hang in the sun.

A Scrap Book.—A large loose-leaf note book is inexpensive and handy to use if you are saving the newspaper clippings of the doings of anyone in the family. More pages can be added when needed and any added data may be written on the note book paper alongside of the articles.

Colorful Salad.—When using apples in salad leave the skins on to add a touch of color to the salad.

Handy Clothespin.—Use a clothespin to untangle a fringe mop. It takes little time and mop will be as fluffy as when new.

Economy Note.—Save all celery tops, wash and dry them and place in the oven, turning them now and then. Store the leaves in an airtight tin. Use them for flavoring soups, salads, etc.

A Trade Mark Is an Honor Badge and Newspaper Advertising the Sentinel

Substitutes today are the illegitimate children of business. They are fatherless and unknown and they come to the consumer with a "Just as good" label on them which indicates clearly to the thinking buyer that she is buying something which is only "Just as good." The unknown product, the substitute parasite, has no reputation at stake. It is merely advertised for sale on a price basis and if the consumer does not like the quality, the manufacturer has suffered no injury because he is unknown and because he rarely links his name with a product as a standard of quality and a measuring stick of buying. It merely competes on a "take a chance" basis.

The manufacturers of well-known quality merchandise today place their names upon it and advertise it as the best they can offer to the consumer. The name of a manufacturer on an advertised product says this: This is the best product I know how to make. It is pure, good and worthy of your purchase. I think so well of it that I place my name upon it as a guarantee to you of its goodness. If it does not fulfill your wants I will gladly make good its failure.

There is no good reason why you should accept the unknown instead of the known; the untried instead of the tested; the doubtful instead of the sure. To refuse unknown substitutes is a guarantee to yourself of positive satisfaction in buying. If every purchaser will confine his or her purchases to known, advertised quality merchandise there will be little cause for complaint. Trade mark products tell their own story. It pays to look before you buy. Reading the advertisements in the newspaper, looking at trade marks, labels and names on products has purse interest.

Patriotism does not consist in waving banners, or wearing uniforms, or belonging to societies, or denouncing other lands, or waxing eloquent about God's own country. It consists rather in exemplifying in the twentieth century, the ancient truth that "righteousness exalteth nation: but sin is a reproach to any people."

Lottie O'Neill Candidate For Speaker of the House

Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill, of Downers Grove, veteran legislator, has received a favorable reaction to her announcement that she is to be a candidate for speaker of the house when the general assembly is organized next January.

She has been snowed under with letters from leaders in various parts of the state and the newspapers have been very favorable in their comments.

One of the problems which will face the lower house next term is the selection of a speaker. With the Republicans in control for the first time in several years, the candidacy of a number of individuals has been put forward by themselves or their friends.

An interesting reaction to Mrs. O'Neill's candidacy was printed recently in "Behind the Scenes", the department in the Chicago Herald and Examiner conducted by Charles N. Wheeler, veteran political observer and writer. He says, in part: "If Republicans organize lower house of legislators and party bigshots seek this corner's advice on how to make a good beginning, it will be: Give each of the four women members a high committee chairmanship—a gallant gesture but are important, evidence of good sense in recognizing exceptional ability—Give Lottie Holman O'Neill the additional chore of floor leader—On the I. Q. (intelligence quotient) basis, she has amply demonstrated over many years of broadminded scrapping in the Legislature that she is worth perhaps any fifty, or more, men members—She packs a real wallop in debate—and her mental processes appear to be hedged about by an incorruptible integrity."

Strange as it seems, come to think about it, that after so many years of equal ballot rights, only four of gentle sex are elected to Illinois legislative assembly of 204 members—and when elected are treated as unimportant scenery—Just recognition of the high abilities of these four women, this corner advises, would make a better vote-getting record for either party than all the political speeches that will be made and would improve government service, no doubt."

Mrs. O'Neill is a staunch Republican and would uphold the principle of the two-party system in government which is so much needed at this time. Should the question of "down-state" and Cook county enter into the picture, as it is believed it will, she is strictly a down-stater although living in the so-called Metropolitan area of Chicago.

Her views on the speakership are worth repeating. She says:

"Women are casting as many votes as men and they should be more aggressive and take the leadership."

"Every session they say it will not be necessary to meet the full six months and then for months they do nothing. At the finish they are working night and day in an effort to clear the calendar. It is all nonsense. The speaker can, and should, expedite legislation and if named to this important place I will do so."

The Lutheran Hour

The 400th anniversary of the first authorized publication of the Bible was commemorated Nov. 13 with a special address by Dr. Walter A. Maier of Concordia Seminary in his coast-to-coast Lutheran Hour broadcast. Recalling that it was four centuries ago when Henry VIII instructed the British clergy to provide an English bible for each church, Dr. Maier said this royal command came only two years after Wm. Tyndale was publicly burned at the stake for having translated the scriptures into the language of the realm. Before he died Tyndale breathed this dying prayer, "Lord, open Thou the king of England's eyes"; and as if in answer came King Henry's edict of publication and the subsequent "Great Bible".

These first bibles, Dr. Maier added, were so large and expensive that distribution was limited. Copies were chained to reading desks at some convenient place within the church. Sometimes the discussion that centered around these reading desks was so animated that the preacher in the pulpit could make himself heard only with great difficulty. "The danger in the modern church," Dr. Maier pointed out, "is not that the bible is over emphasized, completely supplanted by the word of man."

Despite the opposition to the translation and the publication of the bible raised by atheists, heathen emperors and misguided churchmen, the scriptures have been translated into 1008 languages and dialects Dr. Maier pointed out.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"Thanksgiving" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Thursday, November 24.

The Golden Text was "Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most High" (Psalms 50:14).
Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people. I will offer to thee the sacrifice of thanks giving, and will call upon the name of the Lord" (Psalms 116:12, 14, 17).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Christians rejoice in secret beauty and bounty, hidden from the world, but known to God. Self-forgetfulness, purity, and affection are constant prayers. Practice not profession, understanding not belief, gain the ear and right hand of omnipotence and they assuredly call down infinite blessings" (p. 15).

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

Will County has been temporarily without money to pay the help in the court house. In a situation like this the customary thing to do is to quote laws, ask for more laws to prevent a recurrence, and to mention that the supervisors and the county officials should have been more careful.

Here is one simple fact to observe in commenting on this situation, it is a lot easier to spend the other fellow's money—the tax payer's money.

We have two major political parties in this country, the Republican and the Democratic. There are also several minor parties, like bush-league ball clubs. Here is a surprising fact, two of the best mayors, noted for honest efficient administrations, belong to neither the Democratic or Republican parties. They are Socialists. They run the towns of Milwaukee, Wis. and Bridgeport, Conn. No, your Uncle Zeb is not a Socialist, and this is not bally-hoo for the Socialist party.

Gary, Ind. had a mayor who was fond of hunting and fishing. Moral conditions in Gary became loose. The world famed Gary public school system was endangered by spoils politics. The good citizens looked around and replaced the mayor with an honest doctor who had no previous political experience.

People, today, to obtain good government, have been forced to vote the man and not the party.

The Mokena Civic Association is building a skating rink. That's fine. Only through good neighborly co-operation are we going to accomplish better living and recreation conditions in our towns.

Events in Europe in the last three months are waking Uncle Sam up to the fact he can not remain aloof from World affairs. South America is a tempting bait for dictator-ruled nations. Next spring you may expect to see this country engaged in a heavy armament program. Soft words and persuasion apparently have not worked well with the "tough guys" that are running around in the world with chips on their shoulders and their chests stuck out.

The Tinley Park Civic club will hold a series of winter lectures. Good speakers and information of interest to people enrich our lives.

In our midst is a super radio station. Let us hope that as long as American flag waves over this land, that this and similar stations may be used to send messages of good will to mankind. In Europe today ideas of hatred, sugar coated in the propaganda are sent out on the air lanes. Our broadcasting stations are a vital force in preserving our ideals of Democracy.

May we continue to function along these lines, our friend, Zeb wishes you a happy Thanksgiving. That's all this week.

America Prepares for Fateful 'M-Day' With Prayer That It May Never Come

Industrial and Military Mobilization Plans Being Perfected Against Day of Invasion.

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

It can't happen here — but then again, it might. In 1938 Uncle Sam casts a suspecting glance across the waters that separate him from Europe and Asia, just wondering. Will another World War break out? Will the United States be asked to defend South America from invasion? Indeed, will the United States herself be invaded?

Unpleasant thoughts, all of them, but the "peace" treaty of Munich and Japan's successful conquest of the Far East have convinced most Americans that the Boy Scout motto, "Be prepared," is a good national motto. Since October 1 the government has inaugurated a far-flung program for military and economic mobilization, protection against what the army chiefs call "M-Day."

As early as last winter, congress appropriated funds for expanding our army, partly the result of Gen. Malin Craig's insistence that national defenses be repaired before he retires next year from his post as chief of staff. This is the third year of record army expenditures, the 1938 outlay being $492,896,000. Next year's program will cost an estimated $500,000,000, plus high appropriations likely for navy and air expansion, economic and civilian defense.

Guard Against Uprising.

M-Day may never come, and surely the army cannot predict what part of the nation it would be called upon to defend. Listed in order of their probability, the four causes of American mobilization are (1) civil uprising on the mainland of the United States; (2) war provoked in South America by fascist expansion; (3) any war in Europe or Asia into which the United States might be drawn; and (4) invasion of the United States mainland.

Though most M-Day preparations are naturally secret, it is known that the nation is divided into a large number of possible battle zones, with highways, airplane landing fields and fighting equipment already designated in advance. Depending on which of the four above emergencies the army and navy might be called upon to meet, planes, fleet and all branches of the army are being trained to co-ordinate their movements.

One of General Craig's ambitions is to increase our standing army, but not much over the present 165,000 troops. More important to him is a well-trained, well-equipped reserve army. Thus almost overnight it is hoped to mobilize 400,000 men in an emergency. These would include the standing army, 75,000 national reservists and the national guard. Though small, this force could repel an invader four months while an additional million men were being trained behind the trenches.

Air Corps Powerful.

The army air corps now has 1,250 planes, with 1,050 on order and an additional 2,320 slated for completion before 1940. This will place the United States in an enviable air power position, since our bombing planes are already superior to those of most nations. On the infantry side, the army hopes to increase tank regiments and modernize fighting tactics. Only 2 of the 14 cavalry regiments are now mechanized, and field artillery equipment is deficient.

But with sufficient time and large appropriations the cavalry and field artillery handicaps can be overcome.

M-Day preparations place heavy emphasis on industrial mobilization. Directed by Louis A. Johnson, assistant secretary of war, the army has located 10,000 factory owners who will turn over their plants to manufacture war necessities at a moment's notice. With a $10,000,000 appropriation, the army is now placing "educational orders" with these factories and perfecting dies and machinery which will be supplied to processors in the event of emergency. For example, typewriter factories would begin making rifle sights, and beer can machinery would make bomb cases.

Secretary Johnson is also directing plans for mobilization of electricity. Recently announced is a $2,000,000,000 expansion plan for private utility companies, guaranteeing that the nation will have sufficient reserve power on M-Day. There is some talk of connecting all the nation's electric lines.

Plan Rail Defenses.

Since railroads would be a vital factor on M-Day, the government is encouraging carriers to expand their lines. This problem was recently brought to a head by the carriers' plea for a 15 per cent wage reduction. Although the request was denied, it is likely that next winter's congress will vote subsidies to help railroads lay new track and build more powerful equipment.

Less noticeable are M-Day plans to train substitute workers who will replace regular factory workers called to the front trenches. The government would also regulate prices to prevent profiteering, control wages and hours and take other steps to keep the country running smoothly behind its fighting army.

Such preparations require money, and although abnormally large army and navy budgets have heretofore been met out of regular government income, it is just possible that special steps will be taken to meet the new requirements. Bernard Baruch, financier and chairman of the old war industries board of 1917, made news a few weeks ago by speaking emphatically about the United States' responsibility for Western hemisphere integrity. Advocating a huge rearmament program, he suggested that it might have to be financed with a "one shot" income tax. This would be a bitter pill, not only for the public but for congress as well. Yet Mr. Baruch claims we need a two-ocean navy, a standing army of 400,000 men and a greatly increased air force. He cites figures to show our inferiority to German and Italian military preparations.

And the amazing result is that most of America agrees with him. Whereas five years ago this suggestion would have been condemned, the recent developments in Asia and Europe are making America defense-conscious. Incidentally, it is hoped that such larger rearmament expenditures will absorb a large part of the nation's unemployed, thereby reducing relief rolls and encouraging economic recovery.

Perhaps M-Day can't happen here, but talk to a Londoner or Parisian who shuddered through the German-Czech crisis and the possibility becomes starkly realistic. While no American wishes to be a war-monger, we cannot help consider the awful consequences of a combined Italian-German-Japanese invasion into the Western hemisphere. So long as this unwelcome possibility exists it would be comforting to know that America is prepared against it.

Lesson for November 27

HONESTY IN ALL THINGS

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:15; Matthew 19:14-45, 46.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt not steal.—Exodus 20:15.

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

Honesty in all things would seem to be what one should have a right to expect without question. As a matter of fact, dishonesty has become so common wherever man is found that people look on the person who is strictly honest as a peculiar individual. Try reporting an undercharge (everyone complains about an overcharge) or returning excess change, and you will see how unexpected honesty really is today. Under such circumstances the Christian needs to be vigilant lest he also accommodate his own ideas of honesty and begin to justify little evasions rather than being absolutely upright.

I. Honesty Respects Property Rights (Exod. 20:15).

The very commandment against stealing implies that men have a right to that which they have made, earned, or saved. If no one had property rights there could be no stealing. Some of our modern isms reason along that line, but their reasoning is clearly not biblical or Christian.

"Thou shalt not steal" forbids every kind of theft. It includes robbery, burglary, safe-cracking, housebreaking; but it covers far more than those obvious wrongs. It refers to such things as looting on one's job, "borrowing" money from the cash drawer, taking goods from the stock with which one is working, stealing another man's sermon and preaching it as one's own, "lifting" material out of another man's book without credit, contracting debts which one can never pay, using false weights and measures, adulterating food or other material, "watering" milk for sale, selling worthless stock, dodging taxes or lying to the tax assessor, using a slug instead of a nickel in the telephone to escape proper payment.

II. Honesty Restores Stolen Goods (Luke 19:1-10).

The story of the conversion of the despised Jewish tax collector Zacchaeus has many interesting features, but for our lesson we stress but one, namely, that the reality of his conversion was demonstrated by his honesty in restoring that which he had obtained unjustly, and that in fourfold measure.

Insofar as it is possible to do so, the honest person will make right any known injustice. To be right with God must mean that we are to be right with men. The testimony of many Christians could be presented to show that they have only entered upon real peace and usefulness as they have made consistent effort to right every wrong, to pay every debt. Often such actions open opportunities for Christian testimony and point others to the redemption in Christ, which makes a man live right as well as talk right.

III. Honesty Resents Crookedness (Luke 19:45, 46).

In sharp contrast to the prompt restitution by Zacchaeus, the converted publican, was the stubborn disobedience and dishonesty of the priests in the temple. Jesus had already cleansed the temple of the traffic in money-changing and the sale of animals for sacrifice practiced there (see John 2:13-17). On that occasion He rebuked them because they made His Father's house "a house of merchandise." Had they known the change of heart of a converted Zacchaeus they would have heeded His admonition. But they did not believe in Christ and went on with their ungodly desecration of the temple area until it became "a den of thieves" (v. 46). The Lesson Commentary of the United Lutheran Church makes an unusually apt application of the truth to "the goings on in our own churches" in the following paragraph. Read it, ponder it, pray about it, then act, if it describes your church.

"Is a church honest when it assumes obligations that it cannot meet, and is then forced to use all sorts of questionable means to raise money for the benefit of the church? Is a church honest when it turns a building consecrated to the worship of God into a restaurant or a theater, regardless of whether it is done to make money for the church or to attract people who are more interested in eating and drinking or playing than in the preaching of the Word and the worship of God? Is a church honest that turns its pulpit into a lecture platform for the discussion of current events or the review of popular books or plays while the world is destroying itself because it does not know the time of its visitation? The answer is that the church is dishonest that permits any such things, because it robs God of the honor and glory due to Him, and it robs people of their chance of salvation by giving them stones when they need the bread of life."

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to get rid of excess poisonous body waste. They are antiseptic to the urinary tract and tend to relieve irritation and the pain it causes. Many grateful people recommend Doan's. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Ask your neighbor!

Talk among Washington wisecracks, as result of election, turns to possible candidates for the Democratic nomination for President... Garner, Cordell Hull and Bennett Clark come in for speculation... Age seems to eliminate the two former.

WASHINGTON.—If John Nance Garner and Cordell Hull were ten years younger, most Washington political wisecracks agree, they would be the two outstanding candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1940, always assuming that President Roosevelt does not take the nomination himself. They may be anyhow, regardless of their age.

In that case, Vice President Garner would be the white hope of the anti-New Dealers, whereas Secretary Hull would have, in addition to his own strength, the strong position of being an excellent compromise candidate—at least that is how the picture looks now. The point here is that Hull has never at any stage of the Roosevelt administration taken sides in any of the bitter controversies which have split the Democrats. He conducted a couple of private wars of his own, as for instance against Ray Moley and George Peek, but they have been practically driven out of the party. Those who agree with them were for the most part supporting Alfred M. Landon in 1936.

But no considerable bloc of Democrats has ever had occasion to side against Cordell Hull since 1933. Which in itself is a very great asset but leaves a question mark. For the answer to this remarkable situation is that most of the violently factional Democrats believe implicitly that Hull agrees with them. For instance, the Democrats who fought the President on the Supreme court enlargement, and the Democrats who agreed with the President.

Hull Took Sides Only on St. Lawrence Waterway

The only exception, the only time Hull has taken sides in an issue which split the Democrats, is that he has always favored the St. Lawrence seaway. But, curiously enough, this is not an issue which arouses hostility. The senators who opposed that treaty did so because they thought the seaway phase of it would divert business from the railroads and ports of their states.

Actually the issue is tremendous from many angles. But politically it has always been purely geographic, with the Atlantic and Gulf coast state senators opposing the treaty and most of the others favoring it.

As between Garner and Hull, the strength of the White House would be thrown behind Hull, while the anti-New Deal Democrats would line up for Garner. Unless of course some new Roosevelt issue should be paramount at the time just preceding the conventions, when the presidential primaries would be under way, in which case Hull might be forced out of his position of benevolent neutrality.

Senator Clark Looms as Presidential Material

The chief strength of the candidacy of Sen. Bennett Champ Clark of Missouri for the Democratic presidential nomination, aside from his own qualities, is the age of the two outstanding possibilities, Cordell Hull and John Nance Garner. To which might be added popular prejudice against a third term, which however may not be strong enough to prevent President Roosevelt from being both renominated and re-elected.

Clark would not be a compromise candidate. His nomination would be a decided blow to the New Deal. But events have been strengthening his position ever since his first spectacular victory, in 1932, in the Missouri senatorial primary. In that contest he was opposed by the powerful Pendergast organization in Kansas City, but won handsomely. He has been winning friends and strength ever since, not only in Missouri, as shown by the tremendous victory he won in the primary this year when he was up for renomination, but throughout the country.

First talk of his nomination for the presidency began in the senate cloakrooms when it finally developed that the insurgents had beaten the President on the Supreme court enlargement bill. Men with surprisingly wide differences of economic and political opinions are for him. Also he attracted a devoted following throughout the country by his fight on neutrality legislation.

It is a rather strange working of fate that Clark, and not Sen. Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, seems to be in this strong position, always assuming that the third term issue does not eliminate Roosevelt, and their age does not eliminate Hull and Garner.

Wheeler Credited With Saving Day for Roosevelt

In 1932 Wheeler was among the earliest of the "For Roosevelt Before Chicago" group. In fact, while it seems absurd now, it is a serious question whether Roosevelt would have been nominated had it not been for Wheeler. To appreciate that it must be remembered how precarious was the Roosevelt position when a recess was taken, at the Chicago convention, after the third ballot. It was common knowledge that the Maine, Mississippi and Iowa delegations planned to go to another candidate on the next roll-call. The situation was saved by the quick Garner-McAdoo deal, engineered by William Randolph Hearst in his fear that otherwise Newton D. Baker might be nominated.

But obviously every element of strength that Roosevelt had at the time was vital, and Wheeler's staunch support was no small part of this.

Wheeler, however, was one of the few original Roosevelt men toward whom the President seemed to feel little friendliness after his inauguration. On Montana matters Roosevelt consulted J. Bruce Kremer, an old personal friend who happened to be a bitter enemy of Wheeler.

Then came the Supreme court fight and Wheeler became at once anathema at the White House and a hero to the "Yes, but" Democrats.

Real Battle on New Deal Inside Democratic Party

Every sign now points to the probability that the real battle against the New Deal for the next two years will be inside the Democratic party, rather than made from outside by the Republican party. The United States has had many queer political upsets, for example the tremendous swing between the Republican landslide of 1928 and the Democratic sweep of 1932. But a pattern runs through most of the political swings from one extreme to the other.

This pattern usually manifests itself by the party that is about to recapture control of the White House winning control of the house of representatives two years before its presidential victory. In fact there has been no variation of this rule since 1888, and a rule which has had no exceptions for half a century in the United States may be accepted as something of a precedent.

It will be recalled, of course, that the downfall of the Republicans was foreshadowed by the election of a Democratic house of representatives in 1930, the downfall of the Wilson era of Democracy was clearly forecast when the Republicans captured both the house and the senate in 1918. Most folks remember those two illustrations of the rule. But it has nearly always been that way.

Incidentally the turning of the dry tide was also foreshadowed. Its high water mark was reached in the 1928 election, though this is open to reservation. Actually the force that swept dry into office in greater number than ever before, was far more religious prejudice than dry enthusiasm.

Drys Achieve Peak as Result of 1928 Election

But be that as it may the drys achieved their peak as a result of the 1928 election. Early in 1930, before anyone save a few wet enthusiasts sensed the turn of the tide, there was a careful inquiry into all the individual wet and dry fights of 1928, at the end of which the late Sen. Thomas J. Walsh of Montana proved to the satisfaction of most congressmen that the money spent for the wets had been wasted!

But in those 1930 primaries, and in the election that followed, the sweep began. It was helped by the fact that there was a revolution against the Hoover administration for other reasons, and that there were considerably more Democratic wets than Republican running for office. But even in the primaries the tide was obvious, and much clearer than in elections complicated by economic and other issues.

The flabbergasting victory of Robert J. Bulkley in the Democratic senatorial primary in Ohio, the home state of the Anti-Saloon league; was followed by the totally unexpected defeat of Grant M. Hudson and Louis C. Cramton in Michigan, two outstanding dry leaders who had not dreamed their seats were in danger. Bone-dry Iowa elected a wet Democrat to the house.

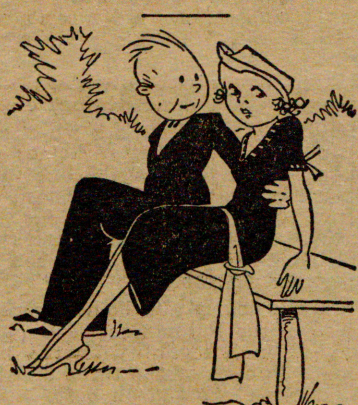

In the months that followed Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills and Postmaster General Walter F. Brown led a cabinet contingent which fought to have the G. O. P. go wet in the next election. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, once the dry idol as assistant attorney general, begged Hoover privately to come out for beer!

The G. O. P. convention went "moist" in 1932, but the Democratic convention went further than the Roosevelt leaders desired, at the time. They went all the way.

If precedents mean anything, it will take quite an amazing acceleration in Republican strength to give the G. O. P. a fighting chance in 1940.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

Feed Adolescent Correctly or Tragic Consequences May Result, Warns C. Houston Goudiss; Teeth Must Receive Special Consideration

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

OFFHAND, it may seem as if there could be very little connection between a deficient diet during adolescence and painful childbirth in later years. Yet it has been demonstrated clinically that there is a definite link. It has likewise been determined that the kind of food which is fed adolescents has a significant and far-reaching influence upon their teeth in later life, and in the case of girls, upon the teeth of their children when they in turn become mothers.

Preparation for Parenthood

Adolescence is a difficult period at best. And if a girl takes an unbalanced diet at this time, the result may be an unstable nervous system, poor physical development, lowered vitality and inability to fight off infections. This lack of strong resistance may open the way to dental disease and to a variety of other serious infections as well.

It has also been established that if a girl is poorly nourished during these years of rapid development, there may not be the slightest indication of that fact until she first becomes an expectant mother. Then she will pay for her mother's lack of nutrition knowledge.

Results of Calcium Deficiency

If her diet has been deficient in calcium, for example, her pelvic bones may be imperfectly developed, so that she suffers unnecessarily during the birth of her child. And if liberal amounts of calcium have not been stored in her body, she may be called upon to make needless sacrifices from her own body in the interests of her child. It is well known that if an expectant mother's diet is not abundantly supplied with calcium, the substance will be withdrawn from her own bones and teeth in an effort to meet the needs of the developing child.

An Aid to Dental Health

For although expectant mothers are not always aware of this important fact, it is true that the first or "baby" teeth are developed within the jaw during prenatal life, and the foundations for the second set are also laid at this time.

Unless the expectant mother's diet is very generously supplied with calcium, so as to allow adequate amounts for the baby's teeth and bones, nature will endeavor to meet the child's requirements by sacrificing calcium from the mother's own body. If she has no adequate reserve, then she may be forced to lose "a tooth for every child," or suffer even more serious dental ills.

Leading nutrition authorities hold that the average American diet is more deficient in calcium, perhaps, than in any other single nutrient. This is especially likely to be the case in the diet of the adolescent. For at that time, boys develop prodigious appetites and a tremendous capacity for carbohydrates or energy-producing foods, while girls become extremely finicky. Either they do not take enough food at meals, or they tend to eat too many rich mixtures between meals. As a result, the diet of both boys and girls is likely to contain an abundance of meat, fish, highly milled cereals and other refined foods, with inadequate amounts of the foods rich in calcium.

The Adolescent's Diet

To balance the diet properly, these necessary protein and energy foods should be supplemented by milk and cheese which are rich in calcium; by green leafy vegetables which are also a good source; by eggs and fruits, valued for their minerals and vitamins; and by bulky foods which supply sufficient cellulose to help promote regular health habits.

Mothers of adolescent children should make a conscientious and determined effort to feed them a diet rich in calcium and vitamins A, C and D—the substances required, especially, for maintaining sound, healthy teeth. If milk and succulent fruits and vegetables figure prominently in the daily menus of the adolescent girl, they will go a long way toward helping to correct the "choosy" attitude toward food from which many older children suffer.

And if careful attention to diet is coupled with careful attention to sound hygienic habits, the health of our 'teen-age boys and girls will be greatly improved, and they will be more adequately prepared to assume the duties of parenthood.

Correct Dental Hygiene

It is vitally important that the proper care be given to the teeth and mouth. But it is quite unlikely that a correct routine will be followed unless mothers offer tactful advice and suggestions very frequently. For while the tiny child has his teeth brushed for him, and the young school child has his tooth-brushing ritual supervised, too often the adolescent is left to his own devices in this respect. That is a great mistake, as adolescents are sometimes careless in the care of their teeth. Mothers must see to it that there are two toothbrushes, one for night and one for morning, so that it is never necessary to use a soggy brush. They must watch when the supply of tooth paste or powder runs low, and see that it is replaced. For it is surprising how few children can be persuaded to brush their teeth properly without an agreeable dentifrice! Mothers should take care to choose a dentifrice that will preserve or restore luster in the teeth. For adolescents are extremely sensitive about their appearance and they must not be allowed to permit dingy teeth to spoil their smiles.

If mothers will feed their adolescents a correct diet and supervise their daily dental care, the coming generation will not only be more attractive to look at but should enjoy more abundant health.

THERE is an amusing story about the mittens and scarf shown here. They were not hand knitted. They were purchased rather hurriedly and sent to a young miss who was away at school. She had wanted something rather gay and a bit foreign looking to wear for skating and these were perfectly plain and pretty drab. She didn't take her disappointment lying down, but decided to brighten up that scarf and mitten set and make it speak a foreign language as well! She found the Swedish cross-stitch design shown here and copied it in all its gay colors on the ends of the scarf and backs of the mittens.

Hand knitted mittens and other knitted things in plain colors may also be decorated with this pert flower pattern. Start at the upper right corner of the large flower and make the cross stitches as at A and B. This flower is a brilliant red, the small flowers bright blue and the stems jade green.

Public Service Prize Winners

The eight winners in the southern division section of the $4,800 home building and modernization contest sponsored by the Public Service Co. of northern Illinois were announced today by A. H. Schneider, division manager of the company.

Those winning $200 each in the competition which began last March were: S. M. Wrigley, Toulon; Dr. D. R. Hanley, 1218 Madison St., Streator; J. M. Joyce, 627 Cornelia St., Joliet; Ernest Waibel, 1844 Sycamore Rd., Homewood; Francis H. Daft, Perth Ave., Flossmoor; Ray Powers, Main St., Plainfield; A. E. Hanshaw, 1215 S. Poplar, Kankakee, and C. Henning Vagborg, 2322 W. 119th Pl., Blue Island.

"Response from home owners in the form of entries," according to Mr. Schneider, "was very gratifying and indicates that one of the primary interests of the individual continues to be his home."

"The purpose of this building and modernization activity was to focus public attention on sound, basic requirements of today's better homes. It was aimed to encourage an increasing adherence to honest building specification which reacts to the benefit of both the home owner and the industry."

"In this contest we have emphasized the specifications in modern homes: Good location and architecture, sound construction and skilled labor; quality materials and equipment; landscaping and interior decoration; sound financing; new materials; plumbing and sanitation; heating and air-conditioning; insulation and sound deadening, electric and gas services."

Judges in this better homes contest were A. J. Kruegel, Joliet architect, Roy C. Stephen, assistant secretary, Joliet Federal Savings and Loan Association, and James M. Whelan, vice-president, Hansen and Petersen Co., Joliet.

In all, nearly 200 homes were entered in the Public Service Company contest with eight winners being named in each of the three divisions. Awards were based on best utilization of the ten specifications in each home regardless of its size or cost.
